ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My thanks go to all the wonderful organizations and groups operating in Moyross and the surrounding area and to the residents in Moyross, in particular, Tracy McElligott from the Moyross Community Enterprise Centre, who provided me with the most valuable insights and sources for this report.

Thanks also to my supervisor, Maura Adshead, who provided great help throughout my project and also to the University of Limerick and the University of Minnesota – Twin Cities for supporting this project through the UL Practicum and the International Undergraduate Research Opportunities Project.

ABSTRACT

This report provides the results of a community mapping exercise in and around the Moyross area. The report is intended to act as a guide to the services available in Moyross and serve as a catalyst for collaboration. Wherever possible, organisations were contacted personally. In some cases, alternative secondary sources were the only available references.

Approximately 50 organisations, ranging from schools, to churches, to community groups, are listed with details of the mission, services provided, and contact information.

It is my vision that this book will become an important resource for the community and that is utilised to aid those in need in the quickest and most efficient way possible.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

INTRODUCTION

Moyross is located on the North Side of Limerick City, and until 2008 the estate spanned two electoral areas, both the Limerick City Council and the Limerick County Council (Limerickregeneration.org, 2018). After 2008 the Limerick City and County Councils joined into one governing body, as recommended by the Brosnan Report (Brosnan, 2014). Still, however, the connection at political level is not reflected at a practical level in Moyross. To this day Moyross has a wall segregating it from more affluent regions of Limerick City.

Developed between 1973 and 1987 as the largest social housing estate in Ireland, Moyross encompasses approximately 1000 houses at present (Limerickregeneration.org, 2018) and is beset by a number of challenges. A 2012 study that found that over 75% of the houses in the Northside Region had their main source of income coming from social welfare payments (Humphreys, McCafferty and Higgins, 2012). A study published in 2006 found that 64% of all family units in Moyross were headed by a lone parent. Socio-economic disadvantage has been a feature of Moyross since it was first built: “from the 1980s, Moyross experiences extreme levels of poverty and disadvantage with an unemployment figure of 84%” (Limerickregeneration.org, 2018). This high level of unemployment, coupled with that fact that Moyross was built as a cul-de-sac with limited entrance and exit points, led to anti-social behaviour that was amongst the highest levels in Limerick (Paulpartnership.ie, 2018). These issues among others presented unique challenges to the citizens of Moyross.

THE CATALYST FOR REGENERATION AND THE FITZGERALD REPORT

In 2006, the impact of anti-social behavior in Moyross became something of a national concern following widely publicized incidents of gun violence and petrol bomb attacks that peaked in intensity during 2006. The attack that garnered the most media attention occurred during September 2006 after Shelia Murray, a mother, turned down youths for a ride to the courthouse. Approximately 10 minutes later, while Shelia’s car was parked outside her home, the youths attacked her car with a petrol bomb while two children sat inside. The children survived with severe burns, and intensive treatment was needed to ensure their survival. The three teenagers that conducted the attack were later charged and convicted for their crime (Limerickregeneration.org, 2018).

This incident became a rallying cry for the Moyross area and Limerick City as a whole. The government took note and sent John Fitzgerald, a former Dublin City Manager, to lead an initiative to address the anti-social behavior and general troubles in Moyross and other deprived areas of Limerick (Limerickregeneration.org, 2018).

The ‘Fitzgerald Report’ was published on April 3rd 2007, and recommended the creation of a comprehensive five-year plan to address crime and other issues found in the areas it identified as in need of ‘regeneration’. The report first acknowledged the problems associated with the ‘regeneration areas’: the Moyross and Southill regions had unemployment five times the national average. Also highlighted was the high concentration of social housing estates within the city boundary. Limerick at this time had approximately 18,900 houses in the city council area, with some 8,000 of them constructed as social housing. The report noted that “violent crime, related both to gang rivalry and drugs, is now a very serious issue and is gradually extending over wider areas” (Fitzgerald, 2007).

The regeneration areas established by the Brosnan Report included Moyross, Southill, St. Mary's Park, and Ballinacurra Weston. The living conditions across the board were poor, with illegal dumping and burnt out houses polluting the local area. Truancy was a serious problem, and the viability of local schools was dropping as many chose to send their children outside of the area for education. Only 25% of the primary schools remained in the O'Malley Park and Moyross area compared to just 10 years earlier. There was also a severe lack of medical care, activities for children, and community resources in general. The concern was that if the struggling areas were not properly addressed the social issues that they suffered from would spread like a "blight" to infect the rest of the city (Fitzgerald, 2007).

The Brosnan Report did highlight that there were community groups operating in the troubled areas, and that the citizens in those areas whilst proud, are generally accepting of aid and committed to actions to improve the community. A three-phase plan was laid out to help address the problems investigated in the report.

The plan's priority was dealing with criminal activity in order to help set a stable base for the rest of the regeneration by returning the regeneration areas to a safer environment. This was crucial as the social and economic plans would be useless if the high crime rates continued. The strategy for reducing crime was to enact intensive policing policies in the short term such as targeting those with a history of criminal activity and appointing 100 additional Gardaí, whose sole purpose would be to patrol the troubled areas (Fitzgerald, 2007).

Another decision made was to improve the infrastructure of the area. This was of particular concern in Moyross, which effectively presented a cul-de-sac with only one looped road entering and leaving. The report further recommended the use of fiscal incentives to attract development into the area, which it was envisaged would help alleviate a variety of issues. Regeneration of the housing stock was also a main goal, as there were approximately 1100 houses in Moyross, with more than a third no longer suitable for further remediation work. The solution to this problem was to demolish and rebuild many homes (Fitzgerald, 2007).

ANALYSIS AND PRESS PROMPTED BY THE FITZGERALD REPORT

A 2011 study that surveyed all regeneration areas and measured the perceived progress since the regeneration programme was started in 2007: 57% of respondents reported that their overall quality of life had "worsened" while only 11% perceived it to have improved. The number one reason given for the worsening condition was crime. This conclusion was troubling because the reduction of crime and anti-social behavior was one of the three pillars of the regeneration efforts and it was a gateway to allow the other two pillars to work. This study also identified other barriers to services that included "lack of awareness of services, negative experiences with a service in the past, and fear of stigmatization." These roadblocks also contributed to the slow start to regeneration in the eyes of the people that it was intending to help (Stevenson and McNamara, 2018).

A constant feature associated with the regeneration efforts was the dramatic press coverage of the regeneration areas, but specifically Moyross, as it was the main focus of press attention as a catalyst for regeneration in the first place. The problem was not that the area was getting press, but that rather the area was often painted with a wide brushstroke as an homogenous group. In January 2008, the Irish Sun led with the headline “It’s no great loss,” referring to the mass demolition that was scheduled to take place in the regeneration areas (Neil, 2008). The opening line reinforced the dreadful mood by suggesting that “The worst estates ever seen in Ireland will be torn down next year in a bid to drive the hated criminals out of town” (Neil, 2008). Another London news source highlighted the general frustration with the progress of regeneration, which it was feared might focus too much on capital development at the cost of the social needs of a community (Waghorne, 2008). Whilst this article suggested that it would be easier to “pay those there to move out, bulldoze the empty estate one by one, and admit defeat”, it gave no indication about where the dispossessed might move to (Waghorne, 2008). Articles like this exemplified the fatalist and pessimistic tone that was used to portray areas like Moyross in the popular media. Although often alluding to real problems, these articles and others like them helped to perpetuate many of the struggles faced by residents in Moyross and other regeneration areas. The intense stigmatism surrounding Moyross made it difficult for those living there to access work and other services and/or supports, which often slowed the regeneration efforts.

A few years later, a Limerick Leader article published in 2014 showed that the same issues were present. The title of the piece “Limerick Regeneration isn’t a ‘people centered’ policy,” gave voice to the nagging issues surrounding the regeneration efforts. The priest who was interviewed for this piece emphasized the foolishness of demolitions, and a need to refocus efforts to more directly help the people. He noted that “Moyross has lost over a third of its population” which demonstrates just how dire the situation was and that much improvement was still needed (Limerick Leader, 2014).

MAPPING COMMUNITY SERVICES IN MOYROSS

GOALS OF THE PROJECT

The goals of this project are essentially three-fold: to assist local agencies; local residents; and would-be newcomers to Moyross. First, in relation to local agencies, this report is intended as a resource to the dozens of agencies listed in this report to aid in mutual knowledge and potential collaborative actions, shared strategies and co-existence. I hope that they can use it to refer their clients to other organizations as necessary. Second, this report is aimed at the residents of Moyross and surrounding areas, to enable them to take advantage of the supports and services listed in this report. Third, it is hoped that this report will aid any groups or agencies that form in the area, including those who might plan to do research or associated development activities in the area, by providing a comprehensive view of those already working in the area. I hope that having a single reference document to look up all available services and supports is a useful resource and I sincerely hope that it enables those in need find the supports or services that they require.

RESEARCH METHODS

In 2013, the Limerick Northside RAPID Programme produced a map of the Moyross area with approximately 30 organizations on it. It was titled “Map of Community Facilities in Limerick Northside RAPID Area.” This, combined with a locally produced Community Information Booklet was one of the primary resources in my research. Both publications contained some basic information about services provided and contact information, which was supplemented with field trips to local agencies and community development workers. Updated information on these organisations and agencies was cross referenced with internet sources and websites associated with each organization to create the most complete compilation of information that I could. All background and general information was either gathered from online, or newspaper archives. The project in total consumed approximately 100 hours.

STRUCTURE OF CATEGORIES

The mapping is roughly divided into three sections.

The first section lists some of the most basic necessities of a community, including churches, schools, Garda stations, health care and public services.

The second section lists community groups that together comprise an extremely wide range of missions and services.

The final section lists hobby groups and associations with more specialist interests that are open to everyone. Complete information was not available for all groups, but they have still been included in the listing with what information was available.

At the time of publishing all information is believed to be correct.

Community, Wellness, Empowerment, Leadership and Life-skills

MISSION:

To proactively address community health issues in a way that the building of healthy partnerships enhances existing strengths, fosters community resilience and leadership, contributing towards improving quality of life and the creation of healthy and sustainable communities.”

IMPLEMENTATION:

The Community Wellness Empowerment Leadership and Life-skills (CWELL) Diploma Programme is co-designed by local communities and UL staff, in order to address specific needs identified by the community in relation to: physical and mental health and well-being; personal development and skills acquisition; the application of local knowledge to development practice; and leading and sustaining positive change in local communities.

The CWELL programme operates via local community consortia representing the full pathway to education and skills in the local area and comprising representatives from: local schools, residents, community groups, adult education, business and higher education.

REACH:

The CWELL programme operates in all five regeneration areas, taking five Diploma students from each. These are supported by their local community consortium as well as University of Limerick UL Practicum students acting as peer mentors and learners.
